Drug policy in Belarus:

- Belarus is an Eastern European country blessed with a rich cultural heritage and a scenic landscape, but its people are subject to some of the most repressive drug policies on the continent. Belarus' drug war shows no sign of slowing down. In 2014, President Lukashenko spearheaded legislation that harshened criminal penalties for drug offences and lowered the criminal age of responsibility for manufacturing and selling drugs to 14 years old.
- All doctors must inform local police man about all people who asking help from medicine if doctors notice any sights that this people use drugs (Law # 1192 from 18.12.2014).
- Drug policy activists are under state pressure: not given the opportunity to rent place for educational harm reduction lectures: national television channels create propaganda reports about their work, and the Ministry of Information has blocked from the Legalize Belarus website. Recently, a special forces squad (SOBR) broke into their party to check visitors for the presence of prohibited substances.

clearly stated that Sergey Kryzhevich is a client of the substitution therapy program, and order are given to bring me for drug intoxication test” (ENPUD article in Russian is here).

These discriminatory practices towards people who use drugs lead to the situation when if a driver gets tested for intoxication and there are traces of methadone or its metabolites in his or her biological samples, it is considered a violation of the labor code and driving regulations and can lead to employment termination, revoking a driving license and large fines ($ 1000 which is 9 minimum wages).

Sergey Kryzhevich, Your chance *“I have received methadone treatment for more than 8 years. The substitution therapy has changed my life for the better – I have a job, got married and have a daughter. In 2017, I had to file a suit as I had been unlawfully accused of driving a car under the influence of drugs. In fact, I wasn't driving the car under the influence of drugs, as the results of the expertise showed traces of methadone which I used on prescription, as evidenced by a medical certificate. Moreover, the intoxication testing was carried out in a way that violated the legal procedure. I based my appeal to the court on video evidence and prepared the analysis of normative documents. I lost the case in the Supreme Court and had to pay a fine of almost $ 1000. I also lost my driving license, which had made it possible for me to come to work on time even though I had to visit the substitution therapy program site to get methadone every day for eight years. It also helped me to spend more time with my family”.

The guidelines passed the first stage of consultation with experts and civil society. In the second stage, after the Guidelines had been considered by security agencies and executive authorities, the following topics were excluded from the document: methadone take home services, substitution treatment in prisons, regulations on determining the state of drug intoxication for patients of substitution treatment programs, which were the key points that could improve the quality of life for patients and help to increase the number of OST clients in the country.
